Boy: Hey, Anita. Did you see the poster about adopting an endangered zoo animal?

Girl: Yes. Did your class?

Boy: No, not yet. Mrs. ... endangered animals to choose from: a giant panda, a polar bear, a sea turtle. Tomorrow, we're going to vote on which animal to adopt.

Girl: Which animal are you going to vote for?

Boy: I think I'll choose either the panda or the sea turtle. I saw a TV show on pandas last week. Did you know that they are a national treasure in China? On the other hand, I love turtles! I think it's amazing that they can swim so far!

Girl: My class decided to adopt an Asian elephant. I'm really excited! Did you know they can eat 150 kilograms of food a day?

Boy: No, I didn't. Elephants are fascinating. So... which animal should I vote for?

Girl: Personally, I would vote for the panda; they're so cute.

Boy: Yes... I think I will vote for the panda after all.

The Asian Elephant

The Asian elephant is the second largest land mammal (after the African elephant). It can be 2-3 meters high and weigh between 3 and 6 thousand kilograms. That's about the weight of two pickup trucks! Asian elephants eat lots of plants and fruit (up to 150 kilograms of food a day), and they drink up to 150 liters of water daily. The elephant's most unusual feature is its trunk, which is actually a two-meter long nose! The Asian elephant uses its trunk like a straw to draw up water to pour into its mouth. It uses its trunk to gather food and to make trumpet-like sounds to warn other elephants. Sadly, the Asian elephant is an endangered species because the jungle, where it lives, is being cut down and disappearing.

The Laughter Lab

Do you like funny drawings, called cartoons? You can see many cartoons, from all different time periods, at The Cartoon Museum, in London. The museum has more than 6,000 original cartoons. Recently, curators chose some of these pieces for an interesting exhibit, called Laughter Lab: What's So Funny? The exhibit is also an experiment. Its purpose is to find out what makes us laugh, and why we laugh at some cartoons and not others.
